ABSTRACT

This document provides a transcription of what is identified as Book 2 of J.W. McCormick, a funeral home doing business in Columbia, South Carolina during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries. This volume includes individuals passing through the McCormick Funeral Home between December 1903 and April 1906, including patients of the S.C. State Hospital who had family able to pay for burial costs, as well as white and black citizens primarily of the Columbia, South Carolina area.

The information includes the decedent's name, last place of residence, their age, the cause of death, the attending physician, the death date and the burial date, the location of the funeral and burial, who was to pay for the funeral, and then listing of itemized costs - such as washing the body, "preservation" (embalming), the casket (including a description and cost), information on the handles used (if something out of the ordinary, i.e., involving extra cost), the use of a vault, clothing costs, and other funeral costs (such as the hearse), and cemetery charges.

In sum, the record provides a unique means of tracing the development of the funeral industry in Columbia - a relatively small fall line community - as well as tracing the development and utilization of different services by the death industry. In addition, the record provides a unique genealogical opportunity - providing death and burial related information at a time prior to mandatory South Carolina death certificates (which begin in 1915). Although the McCormick firm apparently served primarily white clientele, there are records for a small number of African American citizens - suggesting a willingness on the part of McCormick to provide services regardless of race.

We have previously published the transcription of McCormick Bk. 1, and that publication (Trinkley and Hacker 2004) provides information on other undertakers and funeral directors in Columbia, as well as the different cemeteries available to Columbia's citizens during the late nineteenth and early twentieth centuries.

These volumes are being provided through the courtesy and assistance of the Dunbar Funeral Home in Columbia, South Carolina.

THE VOLUME AND DATA ANALYSIS

The Volume

The volume measures 12¼ by 10¼ inches and is bound in black leather with red leather reinforcements at the corners and on the spine. This red leather is accented with gold. On the spine, stamped in gold, is "REGISTER," and below that the numeral 2. Below that is a paper label, heavily damaged, with the inclusive dates of December 1, 1903 to April 7, 1906. The individual sections are sewn in with thread. On the inside front cover is the label for the R.L. Bryan Company, 1225-1227 Main Street, Columbia, S.C., instructing, "Duplicate Order by this Number No.80457."

At the front of the volume are index pages columnar ruled in double red lines, with side cloth alphabetized tabs. Each individual numbered page is a printed burial form (see Figure 1). At least in theory this ensures that the same information was collected for each client, although as review of the data reveals, this was often not the case. Pages are numbered from 1 to 504.

The volume was primarily McCormick's means of tracking burials so he could invoice clients. Each burial is associated with an itemized cost and each page includes a ledger to allow the account to be maintained.

The McCormick Firm

A more complete account of Columbia's undertaking firms can be found in Trinkley and Hacker (2004), but here we will only briefly outline the history of the McCormick firm.

By at least 1903 the firm of McCormick and Pletscher, located at 1440 Main Street, was advertising that they were the successors to M.H. Berry (Walsh Directory Company 1903, 1905). This suggests that this volume represents the earliest of the funerals conducted by the new firm and dates to their organization. By 1910 J.W. McCormick advertised himself as the successor to McCormick and Pletscher. The 1924 Columbia Directory lists a new firm, the Dunbar Funeral Home, along with J.W. McCormick (at 1217 Hampton).

By 1950 the J.W. McCormick firm had changed its name to the McCormick Funeral Home in keeping with a growing trend and moved from its 1217 Hampton address to 1510 Hampton (Hill's Directory Company 1950). The McCormick firm is listed for the last time in 1959. In 1960 it was listed as Oaklawn Funeral Home, still at the 1510 Hampton Street address (Hill Directory Company 1960). By 1961, however, Oaklawn had moved to a new building at 3926 Devine Street (Hill Directory Company 1961). Also in 1961 the "undertakers" listing was dropped by the Columbia City Directory.

In 1962 John Dunbar, Jr. purchased the Oaklawn Funeral Home on Devine Street, creating the Dunbar Devine Street Chapel, allowing expansion into a new and growing section of Columbia (Anonymous 1984:6).

The Dunbar Funeral Home acquired the McCormick records through their acquisition of the Oaklawn Funeral Home and it is to their credit that these early records were maintained and preserved.

The Transcription

The transcription follows as faithfully as possible the original material. Misspellings are retained (except where they were so egregious that they would result in ambiguity or uncertainty). There are also some pages with multiple entries. Some appear to represent burials for which relatively little information was available and others represent the sale of materials (such as a coffin or other materials) to fellow funeral directors around the state. These are included for historical purposes, although they do not reflect burial or genealogical information.

We were confronted with a great deal of information beyond what the average genealogist would want - information on the coffin, the costs of various clothing items, information on where the funeral took place, as opposed to the burial, and so forth. We have attempted to include as much of this information as possible for each burial, believing that it offers a unique opportunity to trace the development of different funeral services, better understand the costs associated with these services, evaluate social implications of different burial activities, and so forth. We have, however, made the decision not to include detailed payment information. We've noticed that McCormick was relatively successful in obtaining full payment and relatively few debts were written off.

Data Analysis

Although there are 508 entries in the volume, there are actually only 500 detailed burials. Of these 36 (7.2%) were African Americans (identified in the book as "colored") and the remainder were whites. For comparison, in 1900 about 62% of Richland County's citizens were African Americans - so clearly the McCormick firm handled a very small proportion of the African Americans dying in and around the City of Columbia. Of the 36 African Americans all but 11 were patients at the S.C. State Hospital, but they are distinct from those identified in Vol. 1 (Trinkley and Hacker 2004) because these had families able to claim the bodies and provide for burial expenses.

While we will discuss a number of different issues, the reader should keep in mind that we have no way of determining if the sample in the McCormick volume is representative. Certainly the small number of African Americans present makes this sample suspect. It is even less representative in that nearly a third of those represented died in the State Hospital. The much larger sample of whites may, or may not, be truly representative of the general Columbia population and without much more extensive study we cannot be certain. Nevertheless, the sample size - 464 - makes the sample more reliable.

Age of Death

When we look at the African American sample we find an average age at death of 38. Whites had only a slightly longer average life span of 42 years. In this case it is pretty clear that the African American sample is not representative since it includes only one child. A larger, more representative sample would almost certainly yield a younger death age. For example Beardsley notes that in 1910 black males in the United States could expect to die 4 years earlier than white males and black females could expect to die up to 9 years earlier than white females (Beardsley 1987:17). Urban areas were even worse for blacks during the first quarter of the nineteenth century (Beardsley 1987:24).

When only whites (with a far larger sample) are considered, it is possible to develop a mortality graph (Figure 2), revealing the percent dying by age classes. There is a steadily rising chance of death from birth to a peak between 1 and 10 years. The rising peak is probably the result of the gradual reduction in immunity as the infant reduces nursing and is switched to other food sources. There is a drop during the ages of 11 to 20, then an increase and plateau during the work years between 21 and 60. The death rate peaks at 61-70 and gradually falls from there.

Cause of Death

Of the 500 burials, a cause of death is listed for 341 individuals, or 68%. While this sounds relatively comprehensive, many of these with a cause of death (173 or 51%) were patients at the State Hospital and an additional 17 (5%) were in other hospitals. This leaves only 151 other individuals who were not either hospitalized or wards of the state.

Nevertheless, if we combine all of these individuals together the most commonly listed cause of death was tuberculosis, described as "general tuberculosis" or "pulmonary tuberculosis" in the volume. This disease accounts for 52 examples or 15% of the total (11 of these were within the State Hospital and one was in the State Prison). To this should likely be added 12 cases of phthisis pulmonalis, although 11 of the cases were recorded from the State Hospital. One period text explains that "consumption, or phthisis, is the popular name applied to a disease in which the chief outstanding and prevailing symptom is a rapid or gradual wasting away of the body, accompanied by fever, associated with the loss of strength and enfeeblement of all the bodily functions . . . the essential part of the disease is termed tuberculosis" (Corish 1923: 671). There are also several cases listed only as "consumption" and one case as "pulmonary consumption." Together, these would account for nearly 20% of the identified deaths. Beardsley (1987:13) comments that in 1900 TB was the most frightening and deadly of all the health problems faced by blacks or whites.

The next most common cause of death was pneumonia, accounting for 25 deaths (7%, including two at the State Hospital). Beardsley explains that, "in the pre-penicillin era, pneumonia carried off great numbers of whites and blacks, operating as a kind of executioner after victims had been substantially weakened by other illness" (Beardsley 1987:16).

There are 26 causes of death that include a broad range of mental defects, including "acute mania" (seven cases), "acute melancholy" (six cases), and "senile exhaustion," "senile insanity," and "senility" (13 cases). Of these, all but one were reported from the State Hospital, suggesting that while common among this particular population, these causes were not typically found in the general population. It is difficult to interpret from these terms the actual diseases, but they could reasonably range from true mental illness to alcoholism to syphilis.

"General paralysis" accounts for 22 cases, all within the State Hospital. Also known as paralytic dementia or general paresis, the early symptoms were "not very suggestive," but they progressed to:

a tremor of the lips and tongue and irregularity of the pupils . . . The gait assumes a peculiar, unnatural movement. The patient may now sink into a hypochondriac state. Sleeplessness is common. There be epileptic seizures followed by various forms of paralysis. The bladder and rectum become paralyzed, urine and faeces being passed involuntarily. The patient now becomes a bed-ridden invalid, extremely liable to Bed Sores. Death occurs from exhaustion or some intercurrent disease (Gunn 1901:388-389).

This was generally a terminal phase of syphilis, so we should add to these 22 cases, two additional cases listed specifically as syphilis – both from the State Hospital. This disease accounts for 7% of the identified causes of death.

Diseases of the kidneys or urinary tract account for at least 18 deaths (5.3% of the total). These include nephritis (eight cases), Bright's Disease (seven cases), and uremia (three cases) – all are similar. Nephritis and Bright's Disease are essentially the same and reflected an understanding that the kidneys were inflamed. Gunn comments that,

The attention is usually called to the condition by an increase or decrease in the amount of urine passes; puffiness or swelling of the eyelids and feet. A convulsion may be the first indication of Bright's Disease. Pain in the back may or may not be present. If some of the urine is boiled, a white, feathery mass is formed throughout the urine [indicating the presence of albumin] (Gunn 1901:271).

Uremia was recognized as the collection of waste products in the blood as the kidneys were unable to function. "These waste products collect in the blood and act as a poison to the entire body, but especially upon the nervous system" (Gunn 1901:272). In fact, Gunn notes that the disease may be mistaken for epilepsy.

Epilepsy is listed in 17 cases (5%), all from the State Hospital. Not well understood, epileptics were often thought to have a mental disease, although rickets, convulsions as an infant, and especially masturbation were all thought to be causative agents (Gunn 1901:412-414). In so far as the defining feature were seizures, it is likely that this was listed as the cause of death for a great many diseases, including syphilis.

Various heart related diseases (described as "heart disease," "organic heart disease," "organic heart disease afflexry," and "valvular heart disease") account for at least 16 deaths or 4.7% of the total.

Typhoid fever accounts for 15 deaths (4.4%), including 4 at the State Hospital and 5 in other hospitals or clinics around the city. Typhoid fever is caused by the bacterium Salmonella typhi and is characterized by fever, diarrhea, headache, eruption of rose-colored spots, and intestinal inflammation. While common during the nineteenth century, it was gradually eradicated during the twentieth with improving sanitation.

There are 11 deaths attributed to either La Grippe (nine cases) or influenza (two cases) and only one is from the State Hospital. Accounting for 3.8% of the identified deaths, influenza was recognized as an endemic or epidemic contagious disease and even at this time its seriousness was fully understood. Patients were to be watched carefully and it was understood that individuals, in a seriously weakened condition, generally died of complications (Gunn 1901:337). Hays notes that pandemics have been documented at least from the eighteenth century, although the most serious of the pre-twentieth century pandemics occurred in 1889-1890. The next significant occurrence was the 1918 pandemic (Hays 1998:270).

Cerebral hemorrhages, "cerebral apoplexy," and "cerebral congestion," and "apoplexy" account for 11 deaths (3.2%). All are the modern equivalent of a stroke and Gunn describes apoplexy as, a disease characterized by a sudden loss of feeling, consciousness, and the power of voluntary motion. Its immediate cause is internal pressure upon the brain, from congestion or effusion. It is most usually produced by the escape of blood from a ruptured vessel of the brain (Gunn 1901:389).

Cancer (including of the uterus, throat, stomach, and neck) accounts for six deaths (representing 1.8%).

demographer Paul E. Zopf, Jr. Infectious and parasitic diseases are still extracting a heavy toll, but we are also seeing a number of deaths caused by heart disease, cancer, and strokes.

Columbia Physicians

The McCormick records are especially important since they document the period when not only degenerative diseases are on the increase, but that more people are dying under a physician's care - illness, disease, and death are being removed from the hands of the family and placed in the hands of a professional.

There are a few deaths listed as "natural" or "old age," but far more interesting are the uncommon causes. For example, in the period covered by these records there is one case of "hemoragic [hemorrhagic] small pox." The affected individual was Mary Seigler, who died at 822 Elmwood under the care of D.S. Pope. Gunn commented that at the beginning of the twentieth century smallpox was "too well known to need a particular description" (Gunn 1901:326). Also one death resulted from malaria at the State Hospital. And there is one death recorded as "opium poisoning" - also at the State Hospital.

These data reveal that Columbia, in the first decade of the twentieth century, was in the transition period from "the age of receding pandemics" to "the age of degenerative and Man-made diseases" in the words of social

The McCormick records provide a snapshot of Columbia area physicians. Of the 500 burials, 430 individuals had an attending physician (or coroner) listed. Many (181 or 42%) of these are State Hospital patients. The prominent State Hospital physicians signing death certificates were J.L. Thompson, Sarah C. Allen, and J.W. Babcock. Babcock was appointed director of the State Hospital in 1891 (Waring 1967:188) and Thompson assumed the position afterwards.

Outside of the State Hospital there are a few names that are found frequently in the McCormick records, including B.W. Taylor, F.D. Kendall, J.H. McIntosh, L.K. Philpot, R.W. Gibbes, and T.M. Dubose.

Taylor would have been at the end of his practice (he died in 1905), but was a very prominent Columbia physician, serving as the president of the South Carolina Medical Association, the president of State Board of Health, and also as the president of the Board of Regents of the State Hospital (Waring 1968:309-310).

While McIntosh does not appear in Hennig (1936), he is listed in Waring (1968:355) as a president of the South Carolina Medical Association.

Dr. L.K. Philpot was the attending physician at the Door of Hope between 1898 and 1918. This institution, founded in 1898, offered shelter, prenatal and obstetrical care for young women (Hennig 1936:160).

T.M. Dubose was part of the original surgical staff of the Columbia Hospital (Hennig 1936:158)

Other physicians listed and identified with Columbia include A.B. Knowlton, founder of a 70-bed facility known as the Knowlton infirmary, which later became the Baptist Hospital (Hennig 1936:157, 160); LeGrand Guerry, a surgeon at the Columbia Hospital; and J.J. Watson, diagnostician at the Columbia Hospital.

Of particular interest are those physicians - outside of the State Hospital - that were treating African American patients: A.A. Madden, S.M. Deal, J.H. McIntosh, and F.D. Kendall. Little is known of these physicians, but they deserve additional attention. Not only was black health a largely ignored issue during this period but Moore (1993:335) reports only two small infirmaries for African Americans in Columbia - the Good Samaritan at 1508 Gregg Street and a sanatorium known by several names, including Waverly and Benedict.

Death Dates

There are 500 death dates provided in Volume 2 - spanning the period of December 1903 through early April 1906. Figure 4 illustrates a simple graph of showing the month of death for these 500 cases. While we see the monthly death rate varying from a low of 12 to a high of 27, patterning is uncertain, at least in this limited sample. For example, we find peaks at May 1904, November 1904, and May 1905. This may suggest peaks in the spring, although the death rate is not sustained, but peaks and then rapidly declines in June. Moreover, the trend line suggests that the Columbia death rate - at least as reflected in the McCormick papers - was relatively steady.

Consequently, this information may have more impact on McCormick's business plan than on any demographic analysis. It appears that McCormick could reasonably expect an average of about 17 or 18 bodies per month - or about one every other day.

The Cost of Death and Burial

The McCormick records are perhaps most useful for the information they provide on the costs associated with dying and being buried in Columbia in the first decade of the twentieth century, as well as the styles and activities that were associated with coffins and funerals.

Relatively few of the families chose to pay McCormick for washing the body - in fact only 15 out of 500 chose this option (or about 3%). Only four of the 15 also received embalming. Six of the remaining 11 were asylum patients.

This is a very small sample and while it is convincing enough to suggest that washing was a very minimal part of McCormick's business, it is difficult to suggest why this may be so. Perhaps the infrequency of washing indicates that preparing the body was still very much a family activity in Columbia; or the washing may have been used only under special circumstances. We can speculate that some individuals from the State Hospital may have required washing for hygienic reasons, while others may have needed washing given the nature of their death (although there seem to be few similarities in the cases reported).

Regardless of the reasons, washing cost between $5 ($100 in 2002$) and $15 ($300 in 2002$), with the average cost being $6 ($120 in 2002$).

Embalming, while far more common, was still conducted on only 200 of the 500 bodies represented in this sample (or 40%).

This information is very important since it begins to help us better understand the breakdown of resistance to embalming. Very recently Gary Laderman explained,

There are no statistical data for the number of bodies embalmed in the early decades of the century, but according to many second and third generation funeral directors, embalming rapidly became a standard feature of the undertaking work performed by their fathers and grandfathers (Laderman 2003:6).

The McCormick data for a modest metropolitan Southern city do not clearly support this view – especially when we realize that embalming began in earnest during the Civil War. With only 40% of the clientele selecting embalming in the middle to later half of the first decade of the twentieth century, it certainly seems that the practice was growing in acceptance, if not popularity, but to say that it was “rapidly” accepted seems to be a generalization that can't be applied to Columbia.

It may be that some of the resistance (if there was resistance, as opposed to simple poverty that precluded wide-spread acceptance) was founded on the concerns by conservative Protestants that embalming mutilated the body and rendered it adulterated, potentially affecting its ultimate resurrection.

The highest embalming charge by McCormick was $25 ($500 in 2002$) paid by three individuals being shipped – in two cases out of state and in one case to Charleston. The lowest cost was $5 ($100 in 2002$) paid by two individuals – both working individuals, one a black and the other a white. Most embalming, however, cost between $10 and $15, with an average cost of $11.92 ($238 in 2002$).

There is some indication that embalming was used for the most elaborate funerals – the total cost of funerals with embalming averaged $92.07 ($1,841 in 2002$), while the total cost of funerals without embalming averaged $58.71 ($1,174 in 2002$). Granted the cost of embalming itself explains some of this difference, but not all. Consequently, embalming may have still been a status indicator, used by those desiring – or able – to spend more.

The use of vaults was relatively uncommon – only 29 out of the 500 burials included a vault (or 5.8%). The most common was a slate vault with a cost of $50 ($1,000 in 2002$), although one slate vault cost as little as $35 ($700 in 2002$).

Habenstein and Lamers (1955:292-306) suggest that vaults arose during the nineteenth century with various efforts to use “rock, stone, or brick” to protect the coffin – both to separate the body from the earth and to thwart grave robbers. In the late nineteenth century the efforts became progressively more elaborate as fears mounted concerning the body of a loved one being stolen for use in dissection at the local medical school. In the late 1870s and early 1880s both metal and concrete vaults became available. They note, however, that the acceptance of vaults was slow

The ends are rabbeted to receive the sides, the top sets loose on the sides and ends, and the vault is held together by the surrounding earth. This type of vault is made with top in either one or two pieces, bottom either in one or two pieces, or without bottoms.

The numerous advantages possessed by this type of Slate Grave Vault makes it the most desirable all-around vault manufactured. Many of the leading dealers and cemeteries use this type exclusively on account of its compactness and the ease with which it may be installed. There is no waste space—every inch is utilized.

and by 1915 only 5 to 10% of all burials included a vault (and most of these were metal) (Habenstein and Lamers 1955:302). In addition, as the threat of grave robbing diminished, vaults were increasingly promoted for their ability to protect the coffin (and of course today are sold to minimize landscape issues associated with sinking graves). In addition, throughout the nineteenth and early twentieth centuries a large number of graves included the outer wooden shipping box used to protect the coffin. Initially the box was probably buried with the coffin simply as means of disposal, but eventually it, too, became sold as a protective measure.

Habenstein and Lamers only briefly mention slate vaults, noting that they came into use "somewhat latter in the [nineteenth] century. . . before the more easily manufactured concrete vaults appeared" (Habenstein and Lamers 1955:295-297). This is a rather vague generality since slate vaults are advertised contemporaneously with metal vaults at least as late as 1920 (Figure 6).

While the subject clearly requires more research, we are inclined to view slate vaults as less expensive than metal alternatives, easier to transport and assemble than concrete, and easier to store than any other option, including wood. We suspect that Columbia was not on the cutting edge of the vault market, so we aren't surprised to find so many slate vaults being used - with absolutely no mention of any metal vault in the McCormick records.

Other vaults identified in the McCormick records include several that were "concrete and brick," at costs of between $30 and $35 ($600 to $700 in 2002$). Consequently, there was relatively little cost savings over slate - and this may explain the popularity of the latter.

There are also several individuals whose graves were only "lined" at a cost of $2 ($40 in 2002$). We suspect that this means the graves were lined in wood - a technique that was used simply to keep soil off the coffin in the short-term. We suspect that it made the family "feel better" about their loved one, at a very low cost.

Turning to the issue of coffins, the McCormick records provide a wealth of detailed information. As previously mentioned, a few of the entries show two prices - one for the coffin and the other (lower) price for an exterior box, sometimes a "shipping box," that was used in lieu of a vault. These are relatively uncommon (18 examples) and for our purposes here we have combined these costs.

The average cost of a casket was $45.34

($906 in 2002$), with a low of $5 ($100 in 2002$) reserved for asylum patients and a high of $650 ($13,000 in 2002$) spent for one individual - Charles Logan.

Logan was one of Columbia's few slave traders, maintaining a small "jail" or "holding pen" for slaves prior to their sale behind his house at the corner of Assembly and Senate streets. Moore (1993:120) notes that he was listed as a "speculator" in the 1860 city directory. After the Civil War he became involved in horse trading and apparently accumulated a “small fortune.” At this death, The State noted only that this fortune was accumulated “through speculative deals of various sorts” and Moore notes that,

Even this faint hint of tainted money was forgotten as soon as Logan’s bequests became known. They included $60,000 to be divided among St. Peter’s Catholic Church, Columbia Hospital, city schools (the major recipient), and municipal officials charged with preventing cruelty to animals (Moore 1993:120).

Hennig (1936:128) notes that his $40,000 and four acres of land left to the schools was to be used for the construction a school to be named either Logan School or Logan High School and should a school not be maintained on the site, the property would revert back to the Logan estate. The Logan School was built on Elmwood Avenue, although today it has been converted into apartments.

Logan’s coffin was listed as “slate 6/3 solid copper Bev. Plate glass full tufted lid.” Like many of the notations, the exact meaning can no long be absolutely deciphered, but we can venture some guesses. Why the slate reference was included here is uncertain, but it is certainly a reference to the slate vault that was used. The coffin itself was a 6/3 solid copper model. The 6/3 numbers are a reference to size, but unfortunately these are only generally standardized – each manufacturer would measure slightly differently (see, for example, Table 1). Solid metal coffins were highly regarded, being expensive and thought to offer exceptional protection. The reference to a “Bev. Plate glass,” indicates that the coffin had a beveled plate glass viewing port, probably over the upper torso. Covering it would have been a “full tufted lid,” with the full being a reference to the lid being one-piece from toe to head. The “tufted” is a reference to interior finishing.

Most other coffins were not nearly this elaborate. There are a variety of references to numbers (such as 1210, 20, 25, 29), letters (a or b), or names (such as York or Rockwell), as well as to essentially descriptive terms (such as Blk. Clo. Or couch). The numbers and names are clearly taken from a manufacturer’s catalog. Both systems were used and often manufacturers would also include telegraphic names to be used in lieu of numbers. Of course these have meanings only if the manufacturer is known. While additional research may eventually identify a York, or a 1210 that can reasonably be attributed to McCormick, at present this is not possible.

The letters – A or B – are also used and the prices – ranging from about $8 to $25 for “A” and from $12 to $25 for “B,” suggests that these are likely wood coffins – probably pine. The distinction between them may be external finishing, hardware, or internal cloth.

The descriptive names are much easier to understand, but of course they provide only very basic information. For example a “couch” describes a particular type of coffin where the front (side) panel drops open, allow full viewing of the body as though it was laying on a couch (Figure 7). A variation on the theme was a quarter drop, which exposed a portion of the body, but still provided a sold wall along the front.

Some names provide information on wood – such as chestnut. Others identify that the fabric covering the coffin was a crepe. At times the listing reveals that the coffin was lined in copper – proving extra strength and “protection.” Some colors are also indicated, especially white, used especially for children

The coffin seems to have been a very important aspect of McCormick’s funeral service. The average burial cost was $67.76 ($1,355 in 2002$) with a range of $7 ($140 in 2002$) for a State Hospital burial to $778.75 ($15,575 in 2002$) for Charles Logan. As mentioned earlier, the coffins alone ranged from $5 to $650, with an average of $45.34. Consequently, at the low end the coffin represented 71% of McCormick's bill while at the high end it represented 83%. On average the coffin price represented just over two-thirds of the total funeral cost.

With additional research (especially the recovery of price lists appropriate to the time period) it should be possible to begin estimating McCormick's markup on these coffins – allowing an estimation of his overall profit margin.

We do have one catalog providing the price -- $8 -- for a 6/0 pine box in 1927 (Norwood Casket Company Price List dated August 1, 1927). When converted to 1905 dollars this would be about $4 and perhaps reflects what McCormick would pay for a relatively well finished pine coffin. This is likely what he was selling for $10, reflecting a 40% mark-up, at least for this one product.

There were, however, a variety of additional charges, even if they were seemingly small. For example, McCormick offered a wide range of clothing items for the deceased and these were used by 236 of the 500 or about 47% of his clientele.

Outside of normal garments, there were three main offerings – a shroud, a sheet, and a robe. The most common item was the "robe," purchased by 157 families (31% of the total and two-thirds of those who acquired clothing). Sheets, sometimes called a "sanitary sheet," "shipping sheet," or "sterilized shipping sheet," were used by 57 individuals (44 of which were State Hospital burials). Only two individuals in this series of records opted for a shroud (representing only 0.4%).

It is difficult to understand what McCormick meant by these different terms, since each has a variety of meanings in late nineteenth and early twentieth century society. In general, however, the robe was a modern adaptation of the earlier shroud.

In the nineteenth century a shroud, among Christian populations, was a backless garment with sleeves, usually with ruffling to decorate the front that covered the body from neck to feet. Being backless, they were easily placed on the corpse, giving it the appearance of being clothed while minimizing the labor involved. This, of course, is very different from Jewish shrouds, or tahrihim, that include a shirt, pants, head and face covering, and belt. In both religions, however, the shroud, lacking pockets (for the accumulation of wealth) and being of a relatively standard form, provided equality in death and avoided the embarrassment at not being able to afford lavish burial clothes. These have historically been made of linen (which, at least early on, reflected the religious belief that Christ was buried in linen), cotton (in the South probably a matter of socioeconomic status since it was so common and affordable) or occasionally wool.

The robe was a late nineteenth or early twentieth modification of the shroud. It was still backless, but was updated to reflect more normal clothing – such as a shirt, blouse, or coat.

The various sheets, sometimes called winding sheets, were placed under the body in the coffin and folded over the body as the lid was closed. While the lid was open they would be pulled back and extended over the sides. The body was not actually “wound” in the sheet in the late nineteenth century, but was simply covered. Usually the body would be dressed in some other clothing.

The shrouds were $5 ($100 in 2002$) and both were used by State Hospital patients.

McCormick offered robes ranging in cost from $4 ($80 in 2002$) to $10 ($200 in 2002$), with most being black and costing $5 ($100 in 2002$), although both white and cream were also available.

The sheets used by McCormick ranged from only $2.12 ($42.40 in 2002$) for a State Hospital patient to the far more common price of $5 ($100 in 2002$).

In terms of “normal” clothing that might be provided by McCormick, we find ties (.25¢ or $5 in 2002$), silk stocking ($2 or $40 in 2002$), shoes ($2.50 or $50 in 2002$), underwear and sock combinations ($1.25 to $2.25 or $25 to $45 in 2002$), and suits ($12 to $30 or $240 to $600 in 2002$) for men.

For women he offered a dress in brown or black, ranging in price from $18 to $20 ($360 to $400 in 2002$) and a white silk wrap (or wrapper) Henrietta for $25 ($500 in 2002$).

Another very common item offered by McCormick were gloves – purchased by 128 of the families (a little over a quarter of the total). They were typically offered for .25¢ ($5 in 2002$) a pair, but were occasionally discounted to .17¢ ($3.40 in 2002$). The average quantity purchased was 10 pair, although most (fully half) purchased only six pair – consistent with six pall bearers. The largest quantity purchased was 36 pair, for the funeral of B.W. Taylor, a noted Columbia physician.

Other charges common for funerals included the hearse, with a typical charge of $5 ($100 in 2002$) when used locally and $10 to $15 ($200 to $300 in 2002$) when used in the “country,” meaning outside the city. Carriages were less expensive, being provided at $3 ($60 in 2002$). The “service wagon” is noted occasionally in the records, typically for the removal of a body. There are also notations of its use for transporting the ill to a hospital – so it appears to be a forerunner of an ambulance. The charge for its use was $5 ($100 in 2002$). Hacks, probably for the transportation of the family or friends, were charged out at from .75¢ to $1.50 ($15 to $30). Attendance, probably meaning during the funeral service, was billed at from $5 to $15 ($100 to $300 in 2002$), perhaps on the basis of time required.

Other services included providing candles for the various services and viewings – with a charge of .10¢ ($2 in 2002$) per candle. McCormick also provided various advertising services, such as placing funeral notices in the various papers. For this service clients paid from .75¢ to $1.50 ($15 to $30 in 2002$), which presumably included the newspaper charge as well as some markup. A range of other charges, such as telegraph, telephone, bridge tolls, and express (i.e., railroad) transportation were also charged to clients, presumably at the actual cost.

There were also some pass-along charges. For example, the charge for the Trinity Cathedral organist and Sexton was each $2 ($40 in 2002$). McCormick also provided a cleaning service, at least for the Elmwood lots, charging between .50¢ and $1 ($10 to $20 in 2002$) to knock down the weeds and clear up downed limbs. At times they also made the purchase of Elmwood lots, with a lot selling for $53 ($1,067 in 2002$) and a half lot for $27 ($540 in 2002$).

burials at "Mill Creek," and one burial at "New Baumville," which is probably New Brahmville.

It's important to understand that these are charges assessed by the institution for the burial - opening and closing the grave - not the charge for the lot itself. For example, while Elmwood might charge $2 to $14 for the burial, it also collected $53 for the family size lot. But when we look at the charges we see that at the time, a typical "going rate" for Columbia was around $4 ($80). Ranges may perhaps reflect the location in the cemetery, the depth of the grave, or the actual services provided by the organization - we can't be certain with the

A final category of costs are those associated with the actual burial at a particular cemetery in the Columbia area. Table 2 provides a list of the various churches, their charges (or ranges), and the number of burials present. There are also a few locations where burials occurred for which no charges were assessed, including two burials in "Family Ground," one burial at Good Hope Church, two interpretations.

When we examine the “sliding scale,” (Figure 8) a few observations are clear. First, even the City attempted to collect something for the burial of individuals in the “public” cemetery – the area below Randolph along the river. Considering the evidence that the City provided virtually no services or upkeep, the low charge must be related only to the opening and closing of the grave. It is likely that families unable to pay even this small amount would select a site and open and close their own grave.

Most other institutions – with two exceptions – maintained their charges between about $2 and $6 – representing the norm for the Columbia area. The two institutions that stand out are Elmwood and Trinity – at both of these graveyards families were paying a premium – either for the prestige, location, or maintenance.

Summary

While we have no doubt that the McCormick records will be heavily used by genealogists seeking information on individuals dying in the Columbia area, they also represent an extraordinary resource demographic, social, and anthropological research. They offer an opportunity to explore the business of a funeral director during a period of transition or evolution away from family care to institutional care.

Of special importance is the information provided by details of burial expenses charged by McCormick since this information helps establish some baselines for future comparison and study. The sample provides a view that includes many families still caring for the dead largely at home, without the interventions of a funeral director, while others were beginning to solicit a broad range of services – from washing the body to embalming to dressing to the final disposal.

As additional volumes that are transcribed are published, it will be possible to extend this research, providing clearer and more certain
